Diploma in Production and Operation Management

[Score: 88]

Course Details

In this course, you will learn about the role of production and operation management in an organization, as well as the phases of product design development, and time span for forecasting. The use of exponential forecasting models to calculate seasonality, regression analysis, as well as the stock points in a production-distribution system will also be covered in this course. Furthermore, you will learn about the basic inventory model. Then, the course will teach you about the requirements for effective inventory management, as well as material requirements planning (MRP), and the concept of aggregate planning.

Then, this course will also teach you about the techniques for aggregate planning, as well as the mathematical techniques for obtaining optimal solutions. Production planning problems using linear programming, as well as the dimensions of product quality, and the evolution of quality management will also be covered in this course. As a learner, this course will then teach you about the concept of total quality management, the quality tools that aid data collection and interpretation, as well as the implementation of acceptance sampling.

Overall Equipment Effectiveness (OEE) - Operational Productivity Enhancement

[Score: 92]

Course Details

OEE is a renowned operations improvement tool for a workplace with equipment, staff and production targets. OEE is an acronym for 'overall equipment effectiveness' and is a methodology employed to analyze and minimize the downtime of operational equipment. There are different interpretations of OEE, starting from the basic discussion on three variables: availability (maintenance performance), number of outputs (production performance) and the number of good products (quality performance). In reality, however, the implementation and improvement initiatives are not that simple. In this free online course, you will learn not only the fundamentals of OEE but also industrial practices, different methodologies and a real case study with calculations and improvement initiatives that will enhance your knowledge of OEE and understanding of how activities are performed in a real situation. The course begins by introducing OEE, the basic formulae and general losses in an operational situation.

Criminal Psychology: Confession and Interrogation

[Score: 84]

Course Details

'Interrogation' means to question a person of interest in a crime committed. Law enforcement officers, military personnel and intelligence agencies commonly use it to gather helpful information on any ongoing case. The interrogation process is complex and can lead to devastating results if not carried out correctly. Investigative mistakes can let criminals go free or result in the prosecution of innocent people. However, there is no one-size-fits-all interrogation method and there are rules for obtaining information, confessions and holding a suspect against their will. Understanding the correct process and the legal parameters involved can make a difference between having a suspect's confession accepted as evidence by the court or not. In this course, we will discuss the various interrogation tactics used by law enforcement personnel to gather information, the policies implicated against poor interrogation tactics and the psychological struggle between the law officer and suspect in eliciting a confession.
